Millionaire's Body Found

Macao, August 28. A body found floating in the China Sea was identified loday as that of Chinese millionaire Wong Chongping, one of 25 persons who perished in the crash of an pirliner which pirates tried to take over on July 16.

Discovery of parts of bodies in the sea near Macao was reported earlier today and it was presumed then they were victims of the plunge of a Cathay Pacific flying boat on a flight from Macao to Hong Kong.—Associated Press.

Premier Marie's Month-Old Coalition Cabinet Resigns

CHANCE FUN

Paris, August 28.

The Coalition Government of Premier Andre Marie resigned early today, precipitating what most observers believed to be one of France's gravest post-war political tests.

The big question was: Who is left for President Vincent Auriol to choose as M. Marie's successor.

Speculation arose immediately about the possibility of the legislature being dissolved and new elections being held.

Charles de Gaulle and his-(RPF) have been urging for many months,

The crisis which brought about the fall of M. Marie's month-old government was a two-day struggle within the Cabinet to draft a series of thuncial and economic

It was generally known that Marie's Financial Minister Faul Reynold, desired drastic new measures, which penerally were agreed to include the raising of many prices.

Reliable cources also speculated that M. Reynaud's proposals included 30 per cent reductions in military expenditures.

The Cabinet struck a snog in its efforts to draft proposed new financial and economic measures.

nounced a miracle of 10th-century research: the creation of the first permanently waterproof and self-winding watch in the world. Today, the Oyster-Perpetual graces the wrists of menand women -in every continent, and has borne the test of every climate. The secret of the Oyster-Perpetual is a patented rotor which turns perpetually on its own axis, so that the alightest motion of the wrist automatically winds the movement-and keeps , it wound. In addition, the permanently moisture-proof and dustproof patented Oyster case protects the watch against damp and dirt — its greatest enemies. Cased in steel or glowing succerat, gold, the Oyster-Perpetual is indeed the world's finest waterproof and selfwinding watch - bar one. Carthage Passengers EXPULSION ORDER FOR Have A Wet Welcome US RESTAURANT OWNER

Passengers in the P. and O. liner Carthage had a wet welcome on their arrival from the United Kingdom yesterday.

The drizzle which sprayed over the sleek vessel as she slid alongside Kowloon Wharf continued as luggage, passengers and friends streamed off the liner.

are returning to take up duties in armed merchant cruiser ..

All holders of British Council scholarships, the students, most of them with a Ph.D. degree, comprised the 45th, butch of scholars leaving China for England. They left in 1945 after being selected by examination, and some by their qualifications.

Meeting the scholars on board the Carthage were Mr. Robert Bruce, representative of the British Council in Hong Kong, and Miss A. Stephen, Passage Officer of the Directorate of Cilvil Aviation Office, Hong Kong.

Among the arrivals was the only woman scholar, Professor Wu Su-hairen, who was invited by the British Council last year to be a travelling professor in

Born at Yetu, Shantung Province, Professor Wu devoted her whole life to education. After graduating from the National Central University in 1930, she taught there for seven years, Professor Wu left for the United States in 1937 and studied botany at the University of Michigan until 1941. She returned to China and joined the teaching staff of Peking University, While in England she studied at Edinburgh and Oxford and visited various universities. Professor. Wu is leaving for

OFFERS REWARDS FOR TOP CHINESE COMMUNISTS

VICTORY PARADE MEN WANTED

Kuala Lumpur, August 27. The Malayan Government today posted notices on public buildings in Kuala Lumpur, offering 120,000 Straits dollars' reward for the capture of 12 wanted leading Chinese Communists and members of the "Malayan People's Anti-British Army."

Among the wanted men is Malaya's best known Communist propagandist, Wu Tien-wang, who attended the British Empire Communist Congress in Britain in 1946, and is regarded as one of the "Top Three" Malayan Communists.

Yugoslav Accusation Against Hungarians

Belgrade, August 27. The Government today accused Hungary's leaders of plotting to overthrow Marshal Tito in an offort to seize control in Yugoslavia.

A 15-page note, delivered to the Hungarian Legation here, accused the Hungarian Government, and especially the Communist Vice-Premier, Matyas Rakosi, of urging "Yugoslav citizens to revolt and overthrow the legal government of Yugoslavia,"

Hungary put a stop to such actions by its leaders which "connot be interpreted otherwise than as an attempt to impose their will on another people's .democratic state."

Yugoslavia declared, "moral and historical responsibility for the situation falls solely on the Hungarian Government." The note clearly paralleled the protest sent on Wodnesday to Rumania, accusing the Rumanian Government and the Communist Foreign Minister-Mrs. Anna Pauker—of similar friendly acts. Both notes stemmed originally from attacks made on Marshal Tito by the Communist Informa-

It is just one more paradox in the confusion of the Palestine problem that the "Left" or Liberal parties in Europe and America, which have been the most bitter denouncers of European "Imperialism" in the East, are nevertheless the most enthusinstic supporters of Jewish colonisation in Palestine.

Further confusion is created in sympathetic European and American minds by the fact that Palestine to them is essentially the land of the Jews. This impression is due to the fact that our school studies of Palestine are almost entirely Biblical.

A month before the end of the British mandate, the Jews began to clear the Arabs out of the predor inantly Jewish areas. They like Acre and Jaffa -

Their method was to open a heavy mortar bombardment on the Arab residential areas, following it up by an infantry advance and automatic fire. Arab civil population panicked and fled ignomitationsly. It has estimated that 250,000 civilians were driven from their homes with little but what they

Praising The Jewish Courage

Some observers found occasion When the British mandate to praise Jewish courage and the Arabs. But is this the criterion of international morality? Did we praise the preparedness of the Italians when they used mustard gas in Abyssinia? did we exonerate the Germans for over-running Norway and Denmark, on the grounds that their rapid success proved them to be the better men?

The Arabs are an . emotional george. Nothing old so much to stir them as the sight of these pathetic streams of civilian refugees mortared out of their homes by the Jewish troops. But Arab military intervention in Polestine was by no means an ensy task.

The Jews in Palestine had well-organised garrison of 100,-000 men on the spot. The nearcst Arab force was the . Arab Legion of Transfordan, which was a fraction of the Jewish strength and lay 50 miles away. These 50 miles were across two ranges of wild mountains, with 1,000ft. below sea level, in between. Only one road was available. Even this line of comthe munications presented a sufficient blems at home; notably her proximity to Soviet Russia. She could not send all her army, only an expeditionary force, and this force operating in Palestine had about 800 miles of waterless desert between it and its bases. This is only a little less than the distance from London to Warsaw.

Although this village had a Food is extremely scarce friendly agreement with the Palestine and petrol is not to be Jews, the latter surprised the un-bought. Imagine maintaining an army in, say, Warsaw, based on Calais, supplied by motor transport, along a single road, whole intervening area being an uninhabited, waterless, desert. As against this, the Jewish army is fighting at home, and behind it the sen is open to the world. started on the mixed cities. The wonder is that the Iraqi and then on purely Arab towns contingent has been able to keep RV CI HRR itself alive, much less fight.

The third Arab force in the field is that provided by the Egyptian Army. It consists of about one-quarter of that army. Ilt has a line of communications 250 miles long, crossing the waterless and uninhabited desert of

The combined strength of these three Arab "armles" of Transjordan, Iraq, and Egypt now operating in Pulestine is only equal to about one-third of the strength of the Jewish armed

Whatever may be said regarding the foresight and thoroughness of Jewish preparations or the lack of these qualities among the Arabs, the idea that the Jews of Palestine are battling valiantly at odds against savage persecutors is simply not tenable.

Nor is the fairle that the Jews are struggling with their backs to the sea, as one good look at the map of the fighting will convince. For it will show that nowhere are the Arabs invading the Jowish State; everywhere the Jewish forces are invading the Arab

STALIN STILL AT THE HELM

London, August 28. The Soviet Union is still a one-man dictatorship, despite rumours in European capitals that the Politburo is beginning to take over from Stalin.

Diplomatic circles here agree that this is one of the most striking features of the present series of East-West talks in Moscow. Stalin, who enters his 70th year in December, still makes all the vital decisions and still holds all the strings of the vast puppet show that is Russia.

His so-called retirement to the Black Sea coast, whispered hopefully in many Embassies carlier

In the same bategory are rumours of orippling linesses.. As for the Cominform's attack on Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia, it is clear at present that this step could not have been-taken without the direct order of Stalin,-United Press.

MEN OF 9 NATIONS FOR AMAZON'S "GREEN HELL"

commented enviously. Over-Population

Over-population of the globe has been advanced many times as a major.

cause of war. The Amazon, largest and one of the longest rivers in the world-rising in the Peruvian Andes and emptying into the Atlantic on the Equator-has an average population of only one person to every square mile in the area It irrigates.

The United States supports about-140 million inhabitants. Britain has little more than the odd forty million. Yet this territory has a known 300,000 persons only.

"There would be a solution to over-population there—and that would be a big step nearer peace," said the man behind the other tea-cup. "Over-population causes unemployment and depressions, yet what must be one of the most productive areas of the earth in this, the twentleth century, is still as it was before history began."

With that challenge at the back of their minds delegates from Britain, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, France, Peru, Venezuela and the States will get together with the local authorities and experts in Lima, Peru, at the end of this month. Several scientists and explorers at home already have been approached to represent their country when the multi-lingual team embarks on the brown waters of the Amazon later this year. No names will be announced. until after the conference of the U.N.

representatives in South America. "If we pull off one-third of what we are planning, the expedition will surely change the history of the human race," my informant summed up solemnly. The explorer-scientists will carry rifles in one hand and all manner of technical gadgets in the other. They will study the climate, record the weather, survey sites for towns and landing strips to open up the territory by air to the outside world.

From the Amazon natives the white. man first learned about rubber and quinine.

"Because of that we owe them a debt and will do all we can to help them-if they will let us," says Dr. Alfred Metraux, Swiss anthropologist, nitached to Unesco, who is working on the preliminary plans. "Moreover we hope they can teach us much more about medicinal plants."

In addition to studies of animal, fish and plant life, with a view to commercial development, the expedition hope to discover valuable new forests of rubber-bearing trees. ...

They may even unearth deposits of uranium and plutonium-vital in the manufacture of atomic energy. But their thoughts will be turned towards peace, not war. As the jungle tractors which proved their worth in the South Pacific war roar inland later this year the explorers will be hoping that the natives with their blowguns loaded with curare-dipped arrows will share their peaceful sentiments!

Most of the equipment carried will he war-tested material from the tropical battlefields of the last war. The major difficulty will be the supply lines. In stoaming jungle, where even rifle ammunition deteriorates rapidly until it is undependable in any emergency, the expedition will probably be serviced from the air....

A great deal of time will be devoted to the natives of the hinterland—their beliefs, customs, habits and folkloreand they will be encouraged to keep their cultures intact. Except that any head-hunting ambitions will be discouraged. "The conference in Lima will be modest beginning," ended the man from U.N. "We plan to spend only £25,000 in the first twelve months. But this may mean the saving of civilisa-

FRED MAJDALANY My researches into the unfathomable depths of the tortured human soul began this week with Kiss of Death a harsh but entertaining item devoted to the sorrows, hopes, and fears of a handsome stool-pigeon who loves children.

As the ethics and domestic disadvantages of "squealing" are not commonly studied in crime films, this one can claim some originality.

The chief character (Victor Mature) learns while in prison that his wife has committed suicide after being unfaithful to him.

As the co-respondent is a gangater about whom he has been keeping his mouth shut, Mr. Mature feels that a breach of the criminal code of silence is justified. Especially when the police enable him to resume contact with his two small daughters, by this time in an orphanage.

A "squealing" having been arranged, and having taken place quietly in the District Attorney's office, a proportion of the underworld is naturally out to get Mr. Mature, whose home life, parole or no parole, becomes intoler-

Although "London Belongs to Me" sets out to give a picture of Indomitable, Warmhearted, Cockney life in a South London back street, it soon settles for the usual collection of boarding-house character sketches we know so well.

There are the inevitable nice Mum and Dad . (Fay Compton and Wylle Watson); their daughter (Susan Shaw), who probably runs the local Margaret Lockwood fan club: the odd little spinster (Ivy St. Heller) on the top floor; the flashy youth (Richard Attenborough) who appears to consist mostly of padded shoulders and hairoil; and, of course, that ever-so-refined landlady that Joyce Carey has been alternating with, ever-so-refined barmaids for ever so long.

To: say the least, these characters lack the quality of unexpectedness. and one is grateful for the comic relief rather desperately shovelled in by a couple of grotesques played with gusto by Stephen Murray and Alastair

After a large amount of Indomitable Warm-hearted Cockney living, the story concentrates on the fate of the flashy boy who has stolen a car, and pushed a girl out of it.

This eventually becomes interesting not so much because of Mr. Attenborough (whose dramatic range seems largely revealed when he has stared at the camera, terror-stricken, a couple of times), but because Sidney. Gilliat at last lets his sense of fun break loose in a funny murder trial and a funny procession.

The film is pleasantly acted and has its good scenes. But you never lose the impression that this is South-East London seen through West London

Plug spent the evening with us. We intended camping for a few days as there were farm houses scattered nearby and I wanted to collect some messages. Plug was pleased that this evening was not to be a parting and forgot to say, "Gawd! I dunno," till just before he left.

We laughed and talked so much that we forgot the horses. Since our experience of losing them we made sure they were securely tethered after night-

Plug and I took a torch and went in search of them. The swamp was troubled with the plaintive cries of frogs. Each frog was isolated, singing within a silence. The silence lived with the sounds. It existed like a presence, untouched by a thousand voices of which it was independent.

We moved down the grassy bank and out into the tussocks. My crutches enabled me to leap from clump to clump, but Plug whooped and dashed straight through the water. I could hear him floundering shead of me in

"You mustn't miss your lunch." She speared sausages from the griller and piled them on the plate she handed him. "D-didja get my note?" asked Plug

I could see that the note was of great importance to him, and then I realised that he had never written a letter be-

"That boy.... "Sixteen miles in his lunch hour,"

I sald. A hundred yards from our caravan a tent was pitched beneath some trees. A covered waggon stood near the tent. Two dogs, chained to the axle, barked savagely when we passed on our way to the swamp. They strained at the chains so that their front legs were lifted from the ground and I thought they would choke.

Their barking sometimes disturbed the inmates of the tent and a woman would emerge, stooping as she lifted the canvas flap, and shouting loudly. as she raised herself erect, "Lay down there!" Her husband was a tall drover-who stood with his hands in his pockets staring gloomily at the ground or at the worn harness drooping from the shafts of the 'waggon. We caught' glimpses of another couple, a younger man and woman, whom we surmised were a son and daughter-in-law.

The women were self-conscious, almost furtive, as they moved round; the camp-fire. They 'puzzled Olive, who looked at them with a slight frown, her equivalent of Plug's "Gawdl I dunno."

On the afternoon we were leaving, the four of them stood in a little group watching us harness the horses. Morgan was restless, and I, was afraid that we were in for another display of jibbing,

We were. We had decided to drive them round while waiting for Plug, but Morgan flung himself back, fighting the encircling collar like a fish on a line. Jim, inspired by Morgan, joined the rebellion, and, with the two of them rearing, backing or pawing the earth, we gave what was quite a good exhibition of futility at the reins. At one stage we faced a horseless foreground while the two rebeis danced at right angles to the way we wanted to go. "Boy! what a turntable," I said to

Olive, who was sitting on the extreme edge of the seat, suffering in silence. "What's wrong? Won't they go?" The drover and his son had walked over.

"They'll go up and down, but not for-.ward."_I_said. I felt much better. A remark like that does one good. Olive and I climbed down from the seat, and I sat on a log and discussed Morgan with the drover. he was a judge of horses and he knew:

that Morgan would be as quiet as a: lamb in single harness. "Would you care to swap him tormy horse?" he asked. "He would just suit you. He's quiet and can pull anything—a magnificent animal."

I could see we would eventually have to get rid of Morgan, so I said, "Let me see your horse." He nodded to his son, who hurried down to the swamp where the animal was feeding. He returned leading it, and a very rejuctant horse it was. As I looked at it I had the feeling one experiences when witnessing. a cloud going over the sun and the approach of heavy rain.

If horses were men the drover's horse would have been a bag-snatcher. But looks can be deceiving, so I said, "I'll give him a trial up the road." "Once you get him in you'll never take him out," said the drover enthusinstically. . I didn't doubt it. That horse would - object to anything. Olive, troubled by her knowledge of my utter inefficiency as a business man, whispered in my car, "That horse is bad."

If ever there were one." The drover and his son had taken the harness off Morgan and were lowering it on to the back of their horse. At the direct touch of the "spider" their magnificent animal sank in the middle like the proverbial camel receiving the last straw.

I agreed with her: "A bug-snutcher,

THE HUMBLE HARMONICA

IIKE many others, I must admit I have always regarded the harmonica-to which height of vocabulary the mouth-organ has now been raised, as an instrument mostly associated with errand boys and small urchins. I know it played a sterling part in the 1914/1918 War as an easily-carried instrument, and many were the experts who played it for an evening's amusement. But today I stand corrected - not only that, but a little staggered. Those' who heard Chamber Huang's recital over Z.B.W. last week will know what I mean. The harmonica now seems to have come into its own as a musical instrument, and certainly Mr. Huang knows how to bring out its full capabilities. There were times indeed, particularly in Marti's popular "Czarda"-when it sounded more in the nature of a violin. The rapidity at which this was played left me gasping when I recall my own humble efforts on the mouth-organ (pardon-harmonica!).

ANYHOW, I feel it is right to record here that I thought this programme very enjoyable. I believe there are to be other recitals by Mr. Huang in the near future, and I shall certainly be one of his most attentive listeners.

A word in season too, as to the impeccable accompaniment of Clara Stansfeld. Too often is he or she dismissed with phrase "Mr. X accompanied discreetly." What a masterplece of misapprehension! The accompanist can make or mar any recital, and it is he who lifts the soloist along, submerging himself completely to any vagaries or peculiarities which disconcertingly present themselves during the recital. A model for all accompanists and a very fine soloist in his own right, Gerald Moore once claimed that accompanying was the most difficult of all forms of music. Those who have tried their hand at it must know this to be true. I shall have a little more to say of Mr. Huang in next week's notes I believe.

RADIO AUSTRALIA

FAPPENED to be listening, (very disloyal to Z.B.W. I know) to Radio Australia the other evening to a programme called "Quiet Listening." It consisted of recordings of Bach, Bandel and Mozart, played by Wanda Landowska on the harpsichord and the Dolmetsch Family. The latter artistes are a family who live at Haslemere, in the quiet Surrey countryside, have specialised in preserving the 17th Century instruments such as recorders, virginals and viola da gamba. To hear Bach and Handel In, this form is to know great music faithfully played and I commend a programme of this nature to Z.B.W. as a worth-while innovation

WANDA Landowska is a great artiste whose H.M.V. recordings are models of this music as it should be played. The harpsichord is a difficult instrument to record satisfactorily, since its mechanism is such that the sensitive microphone picks up its surface-noise. However, I know how much trouble H.M.V. took to cut this trouble, and so far as any recordings can. be, the harpsichord is perfectly reproduced in the H.M.V. Issues. Their Connoisseur List particularly contains many recordings not generally available which are a triumph both of recording skill and of performance.

AND so to the week's programmes, but not before I apologise for a "alip of the pen" last week. In noting Dorothy L. Sayer's play, "Who's Body," I stated it was a relay from London. This of course, was quite inaccurate since the feature was recorded on the B.B.C. Transcription Service.

SUNDAY

AMONG the "Famous Overtures" programme is tucked away Schubert's "Rosamunde" Ballet Music. Bowing to any storm which my self-confessed ignorance may entail from balletomanes, I do not recall this charming music ever being used for Ballet as such.

Certain presentations of "Lilac Time," true, use it, or some of it, for a quasi-ballet, but in the accepted sense of the word ballet, no choreographer seems to have used it for production.

There can be but few who do not know it, for it is full of the merriest rhythms and tunes, at which Schubert. was so facile.

LATER in the evening, Sibelius is the featured Symphonist. His No. 5 Symphony is being performed. I referred briefly to Sibelius in this page a few weeks ago, and must therefore avoid any possible repetition. Of the modern composers, Sibelius adheres, 1 believe, more closely to the classical school than any other. He is certainly the "Grand Old Man" of music today. In all, he has composed seven symphonies and there is an eighth in process of preparation.

AS MUSIC — at first hearing — the listener may find them a little different from the works of Beethoven or Dyorak say, since some of the modern idiom is absorbed into the orchestration. But as "absolute" music—into which 'category any symphony must fall, they are all equally demonstrative of Sibelius' complete grasp of the orchestra as a means of expressive tonecolours. There is little doubt but that Sibelius speaks with the voice of authority in his compositions, and such, the touch of the master in his compositions must be duly acknowledged.

TUESDAY

THE "British Composers" Series continues at 8.45 on Tuesday night with:--Suite by John Field

John Ircland's Planoforte Concerto. John Field was a British composer who lived 1782 to 1837, whose name is mostly associated with many delightful nocturnes he wrote, the influence of which on Chopin is very pronounped. He was a pupil of the great Clements, and if his works are not heard today very frequently, that is not to, detract from their merit.

THE John Ireland Concerto is one of the few modern concertos which have stood the test of time. Although now in his seventieth year, there is a dynamic vigour to the works of John Ireland, which quality is very well displayed in the Concerto which is to be played on this night. The concerto is accepted as a worthy addition to the pianist's repértoire.

WEDNESDAY

AT 9.30 p.m. on Wednesday, there is a further programme by Clifford Davies under the title, "Authology." I draw attention to this programme as it is now nearing its end and will be off the air shortly? The quiet restful note which is characteristic of this well-balanced programme is very refreshing. It is obvious that much care has gone into the selection of music and poems used, and there is an air of restful charm which is very pronounced.

It is to be hoped that Mr. David can be persuaded to return to miscrophone in the near future to continue his "Authologies." At 10.16, follows a programm voted to Queen Wilhelmina of F folland. Princess Juliana is shortly to succeed to the throne as Queen, and the pro-gramme reviews Queen Will belmina's era and her courageous stand

FRIDAY

AT 9.30 p.m. on Friday there is to be a play by Tchekov, "The Swedish Match." The whole play is written in a light satirical mood, very unlike the heavier drama one expects from Russian playwrights. Roger Woodiss has adapted the play for radio, and has made an amusing setting of the story of a murder in a small Russian town. Produced by E. G. King-Bull, the play features Laidman Browne as the Magistrate, while his assistant is played by Peter

PETER Ustinov is a young man who counts for a lot in the . British Theatre, and indeed is a shining start in a somewhat gloomy horizon. Among his interests, he counts Drama, Acting, Producing, and the writing of plays. Versatility indeed!

Currently, he has two plays running in London. One is "The Indifferent Shepherd" at the Criterion, whilst at the St. Martin's he was himself playing the role of the sadistic schoolmaster in his own adaptation of the Swedish play, "Frenzy.";

Ustinov has devoted some time to scenario-writing for films and has also produced a number of very successful films ."The Swedish Match" is a product of the B.B.C. Transcription Service and reception should therefore be very good.

TYPEWRITER ...

This week there are two big changes in your ''Children's Herald''. The most exciting thing is that the second Mystery Prize has been won. This finishes the Mystery Prizes. Instead, starting with the contributions in this week's issue,

I am going to send special certificates to boys and girls whose work is published. Each cortificate will have a value of so many points, and a prize of $10 will be given to everybody who gains certificates worth 20 points. These certificates are also going to be used for Consolation Prizes for older children in the competitions.

The second change you will find on Page 2. So many contributions have been coming in that I have had to hold many of them for weeks because of lack of space. So ''Brick Bradford'' is now smaller, which means more space for the serial each week, and more puzzles and games. But remember, it all depends on you -- I can't fill the extra space without your help! Happy days to you all, from

All you need to make a fascinating little boat is half an egg- shell, a piece of plasticine about as large as a marble, a feather and a bit of soap about an inch thick.

First place the plasticine in the bottom of the eggshell and then push the feather into the plasticine in a perpendicular position. Now glue the soap on the side of the eggshell so that it is just un-- der waterlevel. Place your bont in water and you will be surprised to see it go.

It is not known definitely how London received its name, but it is thought that it might have come from the Welsh "lli" --"water," and the Celtic "dun," a "hill fort." Other authorities say that the "Lon" comes from Celtic "lon," "a marsh," or "llyn"—"a grove," or from the Welsh "llong"—"a ship." Whatever its origin, as far back as 61 A.D. our London was known to the Roman world as Londinium or Londinium Augustus.

A PIONEER PASSES

Dr. Yellapragada SubbaRow, fiftytwo, director of research for Leberle Laboratories Division of the American Cyanamid Company and regarded by many scientists as one of the most eminent medical minds of the century, died in Pearl River, N.Y. on August 10.

Among Dr. SubbaRows exploits were investigations which helped to revolutionise the modern concept of muscular contraction; research in that component of liver extract effective in the treatment of pernicious anemia, work with folic acid derivatives which, among other things, has made available a new approach to the study of cancer; and, more recently, the development of a new drug, aureomycin, which promises to treat serious infections in human beings which do not respond either to penicillin or streptomycin.

Dr. SubbaRow was interested in everything from liver extracts to orchids and his work in the last twenty-five years carried him to pinnacles reached by few medical investigators.

Yet probably not more than a handful of laymen ever heard his name, and aside from a brief paragraph in the reference work. "American Men of Science," there was little in the writen record to describe this modest Indian who stimulated the immagination of hundreds of colleagues.

His curiosity was insatiable. Three years ago he decided he would systematically examine the world around him to fit together a few missing pieces in his experience. He learned to drive an automobile. Then he learned to ride a horse. Then he learned to fly an airplane, won his license and in the last year had made a number of solo flights. Then he became interested in bowling. And in recent months he had focused his attention on orchids and was trying to devise new ways to make them grow faster.

He went to Harvard in the 20s. In those days he worked and studied in the laboratory during the day and in the school library from, 7 to 10 p.m. For a period he was an orderly at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. His work done, he would return to his laboratory where he and other students in the medical school would sit far into the night discussing problems in chemistry and related fields.

Dr. SubbaRow was born in Madras State, India, of high Brahmanic caste. He received his bachelor of medicine and master of science degrees at Madras University and received a degree of doctor of tropical medicine at University of London, where he met the late Dr. Richard Strong, then head of the Harvard School of Tropical Medicine. It was at Dr. Strong's invitation that Dr. SubbaRow came to the United States in 1923.

Aided Phosphorus Discoveries

While working under Dr. Strong, Dr. SubbaRow became aware of the deficiency in his understanding of chemistry, so he enrolled in the department of blochemistry at Harvard, where he worked under the late Dr. Olto Folin, eventually taking a Ph.D. degree in the field.

the direction of Professor Cyrus H. Fiske, Harvard professor of blochemistry. They devised a method for the determination of phosphorus, a procedure widely used today, which helped to lead eventually to the discovery of a substance known as phosphocreatine and other organic phosphorus compounds in muscle which has revolutionized man's understanding of the

During the investigation of phosphorus compounds of muscle and liver, Dr. SubbaRow became interested in the component of liver extract that was effective in the treatment of pernicious anemia. His attempts to isolate this active component introduced a series of studies in animal and bacterial nutrition which added much to the fundamental knowledge of vitamin chemis-

Fractionating the liver extract in the course of his investigation, he isolated hundreds of chemical substances; and testing these substances, he demonstrated that some were valuable in the field of animal nutrition and others were valuable in the field of bacterial nutrition.

His researches carried Dr. SubbaRow into a teaching fellowship at Harvard, then to an instructorship and an associate professorship. He was also a Rockefeller Foundation fellow and in 1940 he joined Lederle.

Folic Acid Research

Dr. SubbaRow went to work on the folic acid problem a few years ago. A number of substances known as Vitamin M. Factors U. R. S., etc., Vitamin Bc, Vitamin B-10, B-11, and others, were reported on by investigators and it soon became apparent that all were related to one compound, folic acid. Dr. SubbaRow's study of this compound and his synethsis of it added a weapon in the fight against such diseases as pernicious anemia and sprue, which is a type of anemia.

The study of folic acid also yielded a new approach to the cancer problem and the problem of leukemia. Both of these avenues are being explored clinically. They probably will not provide the final answers, but work on them may provide a clue.

COLONIAL FIRST-AID

Britain is now spending £2,000.000 a year on research in the Colonial Empire—the highest amount ever allocated to this type of work.

More than 60 new schemes were approved last year, with nearly 90 supplementary schemes, and there's every indication that the bill will be higher object of the great new research drive is to utilise all the resources of the 3,000,000 square miles of the Colculal Empire, with its population of 62,000,000.

The story of this move to mobilise the Empire is told in a Report on Colonial Research (H.M. Stationery Office. Price 2s.), which should rate as a Colonial best-seller.

In far-away Zanzibar, that colourful isle off-the east coast of Africa, a scientific commission from Britain investigates the strange "sudden death disease" which is killing the clove plantations. Four-fifths of the world's cloves come from this British Protectorate (where the Sultan is Governor), but unless the disease is stamped out there'll soon be no cloves for the world's apple pies.

world's apple pies.

More than 250,000 islanders earn their living from cloves, and when I flew to Zanzibar some months ago they were pinning all their hopes on this British research. Sadly they said that at one time you could scent the Zanzibar cloves far out to sea—but that was before the plantations were stricken.

If the cloves die the island dies too for they — and a little copra — are the only exports. Take a plane from Zanzibar to the East African mainland and within less than hour you'll meet research men conducting new trials for fertilisers.

Surveyors have discovered a great deposit of phosphate rock in Uganda which they hope to convert into agricultural fertilisers. Young British farmers who have gone out since the war watch the experiments with interest. They've a hard furrow to plough; new fertilisers will help.

In East Africa too a professional fish farmer from Palestine now investigates the possibilities of fish farming to improve the African diet. Away on the West coast his colleagues experiment with shark fishing, and a research station with its own vessel is planned for South-East Asia.

Motor fishing-craft have also been fitted out for exploratory and experimental fishing on the coasts of Arabia, Somaliland, Borneo, and Sarawak.

In West Africa also medical men are

In West Africa also medical men are studying what keeps a man fit in the Tropics and already they've killed the idea that the coast today is the "White Man's Grave."

It's been discovered, however, that the drug paludrine — successful in keeping down malaria in India: and Malaya—doesn't work so well in Africa. So African malaria parasites are now being bred in Britain for fresh research.

Little is known about the determination of the nex ratio though records prove that baby boys always outnumber girls. The ratio is reversed later because boys are more difficult to rear in early infancy.

A notable instance of a long succession of girl babies is the Dutch Royal Family which has had only fifteen male descendants since 1553.

SHAKESPEAREAN RESEARCH

'New Light on Shakespeare' is the title of a BBC programme this week in which J. Isaacs considers what solid addition to our knowledge has been made in recent years by research in the various categories of Shakespearean scholarship. HURSTMONCEUX CASTLE

It may seem surprising that the Astronomer Royal, Sir Harold Spencer Jones, F.R.S., should talk about an ancient eastle in the Landmarks of Britain' series this week, but there is a reason. Hurstmonceux Castle with some 370 acres of ground has been purchased by the Admiralty as the future home of the world-famous Royal Greenwich Observatory, which is transferring from Greenwich because of the deterioration of conditions for astronomical observations there, Several years will be required to transfor all, the equipment and for the erection of a great 100-inch reflecting telescope. Lane Norcott How To Read A Good Book

This is not easy, for since the Paper Act of 1952 (which made the importation, manufacture, and distribution of paper a State monopoly, and limited its use exclusively to the needs of Government Departments) good books have been beyond the means of all but the wealthiest of Civil Servants.

Last month, in answer to an aged literate heckler who claimed that one of his fore-bears had bought in the open market a copy of "Sense And Sensibility" for 5s., the Minister of Mass Education said: "To reprint to-day such a subversive work, redolent of middle-class prejudice, would be tantamount to sacrificing 5,000 London Passenger Transport Board posters, or 80,000 assorted Forms, or 1 (one) advertisement in the national Press of a Ministry of Food recipe for a savoury snock loaf sufficient for four people. The country simply cannot afford such bourgoods luxuries."

bourgeois luxuries."

We print below the original and current prices of a few good or useful books which are occasionally to be obtained under the barrow from literary spivs in the Charing Cross-road Black Market:

Swift's Journal to Stella (pub. 2s. 6d.; price today, 10 British dollars). Bacon's Essays (5s.; 22 British dollars). Wuthering Heights, (6s.; 30 British dollars or 1 lb. butter). Gulliver's Travels (8s. 6d.; 75 British dollars or exchange suit length).

English Dictionary (very rare, 2s.; 50
British dollars).
Elementary English Grammar (out of

Elementary English Grammar (out of print, 3s. 6d.; 65 British dollars).

School Atlas (out of print, 1s.; 50 British dollars).

For citizens suffering from insomnia, whose reading is limited entirely to the workers' dormitory, there are of course, a vast number of cheap, Statesubsidised publications, which—are obtainable at any national bookshop, canteen, or railway bookstall. Among the most popular are the following:

The Collected Speeches of the Rt. Hon.

Aneurin Bevan, "The Great Gabbo" (25 British cents).
1,001 Ways To Cook Imported Birds of Prey (15 British cents).
What To Do Before You Go To The Facts About National Glue (10 British cents).

How To Behave in a Cultural Centre (5 British cents).

Doctor (50 British cents).

No permit is required to purchase any of the above works, but citizens who are caught pulping them, for the purpose of selling the paper to underground publishers are liable to severe penalties.

(Issued by the Lane Norcott Second Sight Bureau. Hashish And Opium Substitutes Always In Stock. Secrecy A Sacred Trust. Oblivion Guaranteed.)

The average long novel is an elephantine humbug. As I toil through interminable family-sagas I can feel no conviction that the author, when he set out, had any genuine objective,
His story has merely grown; he has added to it and added to it, as to some nightmare piece of knitting.

The result (to continue to mix metaphors) resembles more than anything else a gigantic shapeless garment, all arms and legs and carelessly dropped and clumsily picked-up stitches, in which no shape of solid reality could ever be accommodated.

Only Way To Handle it

Champion Road, by Frank Tilsley, the Daily Mail choice for August, is a very, very long book—indeed, at 692 closely printed pages, quite one of the longest to appear in 1948.

But it has other remarkable qualities besides its unusual length; and if the novelist has decided to spread himself beyond the common measure, that, I believe, is because he is attacking a large subject and, given his method and point there was no other means of handing it.

For Tilsley belongs to the school of realists which was started by Daniel Defoe and afterwards revived, with varying degrees of success, by George Moore and Arnold Bennett.

Many novelists are deliberately selective. What they decide to leave out is just as important as what they choose to put in; whereas writers of the Tilsley school produce an impression of life by including every detail.

It's An All-In Picturé

The crack in the tea-cup, a gesture of despair, a quarrel with one's wife, an awkward letter to the bank manager—all are reported by the novelist with the same impartiality.

A perilous procedure no doubt, but in "Champion Road" it comes off.

I must admit that I embarked on Frank Tilsley's book with one or two very definite though perhaps unreasonable, prejudices. I have never lived in industrial Lancashire and am therefore only moderately interested in the private lives of its inhabitants—I abominate speculative builders—and, as I have already suggested, the mammoth novel is a form with which I have very little sympathy.

"Champlon Road" overcame them all. At first the attention I gave was grudging: but gradually this account of Jonathan Briggs' unscrupulous and amitious progress—from a newspaper-round to command of a thriving modern industy—began to develop and acquire momentum; and I found myself growing more and more deeply involved in the triumphs and defeats, the splendours and miscries, of Tilsley's unheroic here.

He is not heroic, but he is exceedingly real; and so is the redhaired, indomitable, tight-lipped woman whom he marries—who refuses to follow him in his social ascent, yet remains grimly devoted to her husband in spite of infidelities.

Both are ordinary people, and it is Frank Tilsley's appreciation of, and ability to convey, the extraordinariness of the ordinary— the drama of humdrum everyday existence—that makes his novel so convincing.

Wrapped Up In His 'People'

He is passionately interested in the characters he describes. But he never moralises at their expense, and never seems to patronise them. They are human beings, and that is enough for him—Jonathan, grasping, selfish, and dishonest, hard at work increasing his bank balance, and planing row after row of flimsy brick boxes across green and pleasent farmland; his wife, his business cronies, and his various foolish mistresses.

"Champion Road" is the story of a jerry-builder—planned on generous and unpretentious lines by one of the more intelligent of our modern literary architects.

HENSON LAUGH STORY

One of the great clowns of this age—the man who is just as funny as he looks—reveals his biggest blunder in his autobiography. Yours Faithfully, Leslie Henson (John Long, 12s. 6d.).

It happened in New York in 1915. He was playing in "Tonight's the Night," the show he had joined in London as understudy to three stars with a small part of his own, all for £5 a week.

The theatre across the road was showing a Marie Dressler film called "Tilly's Punctured Romance," introducing a sensational new comedian from England named Charlie Chaplin.

An enterprising film producer wanted to cash in on the Chaplin craze by setting up Leslie Henson as a rival. He offered him $500 a week for the first picture, $1,000 for the second, $1,500 for the third.

Leslie, then earning $50 a week, said: "No, thanks. I don't think this moving picture business will last any longer than roller skating."

Instead the little man with the strangulated voice and the piscatorial leer (they called him "Troutie" even at school) came home to join the Army and make his name in those great days of musical comedy at the Winter Garden and the Galety. Leslie Henson was born into the meat business and began life behind the counter of a Hackney butcher's shop. But after 18 months in the family firm he abandoned carcases for concert party and joined "The Tatlers" at Penarth.

His early struggle, his West End successes (12 long runs in a row, with no more than a fortnight's break in between), and his marathon war-time travels to entertain the troops—he recounts them all in this racy, readable, pleasantly conversational book.

U.S. STARS II K SONGS

British song publishers are beginning to discover the British song.

In and around London's Charing Cross-road there are 40 publishers of popular songs, turning out about 2,000 songs a year. So far 75 per cent. of that output has been American. But now the ratio is likely to be adjusted—and if it is it will be largely the Americans' own doing. For example.

Topping the bill at the West End's two variety theatres this week are (as usual) two American acts — the Andrews Sisters at the Palladium, and Hongy Carmichael at the Casino.

It is a British song that stops the Andrews Sisters' show every night—"Underneath the Arches," written by Bud Flanagan in a Derby dressing-room 22 years ago. In its heyday here it sold 1,000,000 copies. Today it is the new rage in America, all because it was slipped into a gramophone record broadcast by an ex-G.L. who had heard it in England.

Among the shouts for encores after Hoagy Carmichael's act you will hear "Souvenirs"—short for "Among My Souvenirs," the one song associated with the "Stardust" man that he didn't write himself.

"Souvenirs" is one of the 1,000 songs written, by Britain's 58-year-old Horatio Nicholls. He wrote it 21 years ago on a car trip from London to Llandudno. It sold 3,000,000 copies and contributed £20,000 towards his £1,000,-000 song earnings.

Hongy Carmichael had one song to sing in the film "The Best Years of Our Lves." Of all the songs available (his own 80 included) he chose Horatio Nicholls' forgotten tune and turned it into an American best seller.

New British songs are also getting themselves noticed on both side of the Atlantic. "Galway. Bay," written by a Leicester psychiatrist; Dr. Arthur Colahan, is in its 14th week as No. 1 best seller on this side and has already topped 500,000 copies.

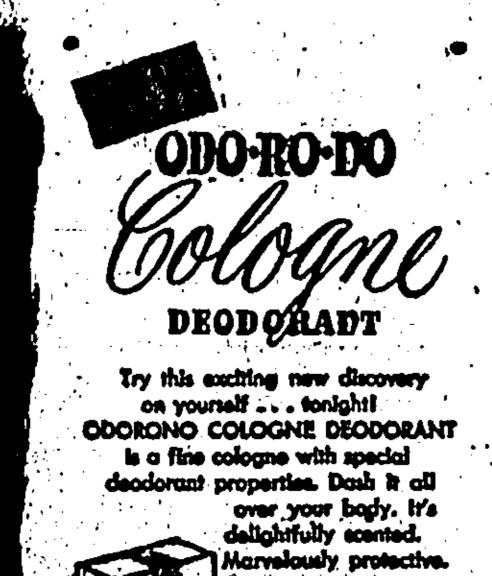

And American song "Dance Baller.

An American song, "Dance, Baller-ina, Dance," comes a close second, but other British songs are pushing towards the top—among them—"Time-May Change" (Hugh Wade's biggest hit in 12 years of composing) and "The Dream of Olwen."

Olwen is the wonder girl of Tin Pan Alley. The song was originally a plano plece, written by Charle's Williams for the film "While I Live." Its publisher. Lawrence Wright (alias Horatio Nicholis), claims no credit for it. He would have turned it down, but his manager and his salesman out-talked him.

Now, with a lyric attached, it is selling 10,000 copies a week—at 2s. 6d., not the usual 1s.—and has already sold over 100,000,

No. 2. How To Replace A Broken Roof Tile.

Under Section B. Para 8 of the Amalgamated Trades Protection Act (1954) It is illegal for a State dwellingholder to replace a broken roof tile with his own hands. Nor may he permit the work to be done by a relation. friend, or any full- or part-time licensed domestic lady or gentleman help-

Upon finding a broken roof tile on the ground, the dwelling-holder should immediately notify his local Amalgamated Trades Protection Officer, who will send an Examiner to inspect it and write a report upon its size, shape. and condition.

This report will be placed before the Regional Work Allotment Board and In due course the dwelling-holder will receive a Sancton T Card, stating the type and grade of craftsman that he may employ to restore the tile, weather permitting.

Saction T Cards are valid for seven consecutive days only, and it is essential that the dwelling-holder shall take this document promptly to his local National Labour Lounge, where, for a fee of one British dollar, his requirements will be entered on an Approved ·Application Display Card.

This card will be hung in the Workers' Hall of Leisure and Rest and, should it catch the eye of any disengaged tiler and the job appeal to him. then the dwelling-holder will be requested-to-present-himself-at-a-statedtime for an interview.

The penalties for replacing loose or broken tiles without the assistance or advice of an approved licensed craftsman are very severe, and include forfeiture of State Pleasure Dockets, Free Syrup Coupons, and Canteen Meat Vouchers, and temporary or total banishment from Cultural Centres and Discussion Groups.

The laws prescribe penalties for irregularities in blds or plays but not for improprieties in connection with these. Forty of these improprieties can be posted up in every cardroom to pre-vent recurrence of offences (which, in-cidentally, are in nearly all cases innocent), but otherwise only a personal warning can as a rule stop these in-formative and innocent improprieties.

Curiously enough the degree of impropriety can vary with the kind of game and with the degree of skill of the offender. Thus a "slow pass' may be legitimate in Duplicate, where play is against other tables, but too informative in rubber bridge, or it may be, legitimate for a week player in rubber bridge but not for an expert.

In the 1934. Anglo-American match for the Schwab Cup there was a discussion on a long pause in the bidding which was settled amicably. Such discussions are almost unheard-of in important matches, although long pauses are usual.

Although improprieties in nearly all cases are innocent they can cause loss. to the non-offending side when the partner of the offender takes advantage of the impropriety — which he should avoid doing. The guiding principle to keep in mind is that it is reprehensible to profit by information. thus gained, and therefore that all four players should assist in preventing or avoiding such irregularities or improprieties. Hesitations are not so harmful as many of the other improprieties, all of which require handling with tact. and fairness.

You will notice that each style features the new shoulder line, a natural slope, without 'padding, There is special interest in these shoulder lines, with their attractive yoke effects, which will be quite spoilt if pads are inserted . . . so, don't be tempted to put even the smallest size.

The first is a delicate trifle confrom white nylon georgette, lace insertion and edging, and a couple of yards of the narrowest black satin ribbon.

The lines are very simple Just a plain round neck, not too high at the throat and elbow length sleeves with a little fullness. It is the lace treatment which makes this blouse into something special, insertion lace outlines the neck, the yoke and front panel and edges the gathered sleeves. Lace edging is stitched all along the outer sides of the insertion, forming tiny frills around the neck and just above the elbows , . . The narrow ribbon, slotted through the inscrition lace, enbances the design and draws atfention to the beauty of the lace. The second design is in fine handkerchief linen, trimmed with a combination of embroidery and lace. The deep shoulder yake is encircled by a band of cut out embroidery in the daisy motif.
